AN EDUCATIONAL AUTOCRACY

The State Department of Education in promoting its campaign for the adoption of the two school amendment is having published in the Louisville newspaper a series of interviews with school heads throughout the State, a very large percentage of whom declare themselves in favor of the amendments.

The persistency with which these interviews are being printed leads to the conclusion that the Department regards this species of propaganda as a very impressive argument for the adoption of the amendments.

A basic principle of the Department seems to have overlooked entirely is that the schools exist for the benefit of the children, and not for the benefit of the teacher and the superintendent. School laws should be framed and administered in the interest of the children who attend the schools and the taxpayers who support the schools, rather than in the interest of the teacher and superintendent, who are the beneficiaries of the taxpayers.

Moreover, the administration of any law tends to be left to the discretion of our population most directly affected by that administration. If this were permitted, selfish considerations would invariably defeat justice.

If the existing laws were framed and administered by the legislature we might depend upon it that they would be in the interest of the banks and not the people. If the manufacturers framed the tariff laws, a fairer consideration would be given prime consideration. The same principle is true of any profession or in any line of business. Impartial justice would be the result.

We do not mean to say that the other extreme. Banks should be controlled by laws affecting mainly interests of manufacturers and tariff schedules, railroad rates and like that. When such laws are being enacted, their influence should be very far removed from the people. Special care should be exercised to state the conditions under which it operates. There should be a variety of courses, providing a system of checks and balances, which is the best guarantee of what we want, the best interests of what we want, the best interests of what we want.

During the present campaign in Kentucky, it seems that the principle is being disregarded. An educational autocracy is being set up in the State to jam down the people's throats two constitutional amendments for which there is no general public sentiment whatever.

There is a callous indifference to the fact that the schools are sustained by the taxpayers for the benefit of the teacher and not for the teachers. One would think from the long and unceasing list of interviews published daily that the schools in Kentucky were the private property and concern of the teachers, who are their beneficiaries, instead of the people who are supporting them.

We regret that an ambitious State Superintendent at Frankfort, in building up an educational machine, has fostered such an idea. In the name of educational progress, he has done the cause of education in Kentucky an incalculable injury. He has placed upon the great interest of which he is the head the stamp of autocracy, which the people are sure to resent.

By his unreasonable demands and the character of campaign that has been conducted, he has put the schools of Kentucky in a position where they may fail in the future to get their just deserts at the people's hands.

The popular resentment that has been aroused against an unworthy school program in Kentucky may easily sweep on until it gathers in its opposition a resentment against every worthy school cause.

It is time, in the interest of a cause greater than any man or any man may ever connect with it in Kentucky for Mr. Colvin and his enthusiastic zealots to call a halt in their campaign. There is no chance for them to carry their amendments, and in pursuing a blind hope, they may do great injury to an interest which is indispensable to the State's progress, and in which thousands of Kentuckians who are not and will never be the beneficiaries of school laws, feel a vital concern. THOROUGHBRED INTERESTS ATTACKED

Helm Bruce, Former Attorney for St. Louis Bucket Shop Syndicate Seeks to Destroy Racing.

REPEAL OF THE PRESENT LAW MEANS THE RETURN OF THE BANISHED BOOK MAKERS TO KENTUCKY

The Kentucky Jockey Club Pays Over $300,000 Yearly in Taxes Into the State Treasury.

(The Thoroughbred Record.)

Kentucky is the home of the thoroughbred. It is the nursery of the best breed of horses the world has produced. An infusion of thoroughbred blood enriches every other strain and gives quality, speed and courage to the older breeds. Hundreds of thousands of acres are devoted to the raising of thoroughbreds in this State, and millions of dollars are invested in the industry.

At the coming session of the legislature an organized effort will be made to destroy the thoroughbred interest by waste the fertile pastures, now valued at from $200 to $1,000 an acre, upon which they graze and reduce the peerless Man O' War, for whom $200,000 has been refused to the worth of a pinto horse.

Under the old bookmaking system which Mr. Bruce sought to perpetuate for his clients the State did not receive a dollar, under the present law the Kentucky Jockey Club pays yearly into the State Treasury over $300,000. If Mr. Bruce succeeds in destroying the thoroughbred interest this immense sum will be entirely lost to the State and the bookmakers will return to prey on the public.

The leader of this destructive crusade, falsely put forth as a moral issue, is Helm Bruce, a Louisville lawyer who, nursing a personal grievance, and in grateful remembrance of his former race track clients, Tilles and Adler, the St. Louis bucket shop syndicate, seeks to prohibit all racing in Kentucky. When the Racing Commission was created by an act of the legislature and the turf in this State was taken out of the hands of the bookmakers who had disdained a royal sport, Helm Bruce, took a few from this graduate of bucket shop owners and sought to have the law declared unconstitutional. He was defeated in his selfish purpose and now that the scandal breeding bookmaker has been driven out, and the turf is prospering under the paternal system, with the leading breeders of Kentucky, selected by the Governor, giving their time to the enforcement of the law, Mr. Bruce seeks to destroy the entire turf structure and carry it with the whole thoroughbred interests of Kentucky.

Desha Breckinridge, editor of the Lexington Herald, has defended racing, as now conducted under the State Commission, and in a series of frank and forceful editorials he has exposed the inconsistency of Helm Bruce, once an attorney for the bookmakers, and now advocating the destruction of the partnerships which would open the way for the return of Mr. Bruce's former clients to Kentucky.

Mr. Bruce yields ignorance of the character of his clients or their selfish interest in the following statement to Mr. Breckinridge:

"A number of statements are made as to my knowing that certain alleged ramifications in connection with racing, formerly stated were that race tracks were controlled by gamblers and that the bookmakers retained a right to their per cent, and that the results of remuneration were remunerated under this system. The fact is I know none of these things."

It is said that I know that Tilles, Adler and others of St. Louis, owned stakes and Douglas Park and it is said they, as bookmakers, ran race tracks in various sections of the country, controlled Latsota and Long Island Park, that there was a syndicate book on all the tracks controlled by them, that racing in Kentucky was in a deplorable condition, that the meetings were long and under the syndicate system of bookmaking every sort of rascality was committed.

Mr. Breckinridge makes the following reply:

Mr. Bruce knew that Tilles, Adler and others, who ran bookmakers and race tracks in various sections of the country, controlled Latsota and Long Island Park, that there was a syndicate book on all the tracks controlled by them, that racing in Kentucky was in a deplorable condition, that the meetings were long and under the syndicate system of bookmaking every sort of rascality was committed.

Mr. Bruce states: "I knew none of these things."

"We know that all statements made by us are true, that all intelligent men connected with racing or interested in racing know them to be true, that the facts were published in the daily newspapers, and that in the discussion in regard to the enactment of the bill creating the State Racing Commission were alleged and not denied. But we repeat at its face value Mr. Bruce's statement: "I know none of these things."

Mr. Bruce does recall that Tilles had an interest in the Douglas Park Jockey Club. It is interesting to know that this much of what was general knowledge permeated through the atmosphere of almost ignorance that surrounded Mr. Bruce. If he had then had the slightest interest in the promotion of racing either as a sport or as an aid to the breeding of horses or as a destructive agency of all that is good and noble, it seems to our minds intelligence he would have informed himself as to the controlling factors in racing and certainly as to the personnel of his clients.

It has been a long time since the State Racing Commission was created and the effort made by the owners of Douglas Park and Latsota—Tilles, Adler—to have that act declared unconstitutional. Mr. Bruce makes a very plausible statement of the basis of that act, but a statement that our opinion is entirely misleading.

power, which was never done before its creation.

Mr. Bruce may not know it, but we believe it to be a fact that the chief reason his known client, Cella, and his actual clients, Cella's associates, wanted the act declared unconstitutional was that it made possible the destruction of their syndicate book.

We do not say that Mr. Bruce knows it, because after his statement we fear to state that he knows even the most widely known fact, but according to the grand jury of Jefferson County it is a fact "that a vast number of handbooks are being operated in the city of Louisville."

We have not heard of any movement by Mr. Bruce to stop these handbooks. If Mr. Bruce had succeeded in the suit to declare unconstitutional the act creating the State Racing Commission there would be books on the race tracks as well as handbooks in the city. The law now prohibits handbooks in the city. But they exist in the city of Louisville. Yet Mr. Bruce starts a campaign against "legalized betting" and so far as we know takes no action against the illegal betting that is, in our opinion, infinitely the greater evil, which is rampant in his own home town.

In the communication published this morning, Mr. Bruce says:

"I have never pretended to make any accurate statement of what are the total profits of the Jockey Club, because I do not know them."

In a statement to him sent through the Associated Press from Louisville September 17, he says:

"A legalized giant monopoly enjoying the gambling privileges realizes a profit of two or three million of dollars a year out of this demoralizing vice."

Again we apologize for having stated in a previous editorial that Mr. Bruce knows this statement to be true. But we know that it is inaccurate and utterly misleading and known to be inaccurate by every man and woman who has even cursory information in regard to the person and stakes given by the Jockey Club, the expenses incident to the conduct of racing and the taxes paid by the Jockey Club.

Mr. Bruce closes his communication with this statement:

"Particularized betting on the race tracks may be a safer form of betting than bookmaking, safer for the gambler—but I am not interested in protecting the gambler."

Who is it Mr. Bruce is interested in protecting? As a lawyer he was interested in forwarding the interests of Tilles, Adler and others, who, though of course he never knew it, controlled bucket shops and syndicate books. The present movement started by him will prove to the benefit of the bookmaker and handbook men, though equally, of course, he does not know this. As proven by the result in New York, the success of the movement he advocates will lead to a form of gambling that is most pernicious and a real racket.

As revealed by the report of the grand jury in Louisville the handbooks flourish even in the refined atmosphere that surrounds Mr. Bruce.

Not interested in protecting the gambler? Of course not. Not interested in the personnel of his clients who employed his services to destroy the State Racing Commission so that they might run race tracks in Kentucky as they run them in Missouri solely for the benefit of the syndicate book.

Not interested in protecting the breeding of horses? Why is Mr. Bruce's real interest?

His letter proves, according to his own statements, that Mr. Bruce has never been interested enough to ascertain even the most widely known facts in regard to racing and that he knows no more about it now than he knew when he was the attorney for Douglas Park and the bucket shop bookmakers in agreement on that owned it.

Why is Mr. Bruce giving his time and his high ability and great reputation and his effort to the fight to have repealed the provision in the Kentucky statute that was passed April 8th, 1881, six months before he appeared as the attorney for the Douglas Park Jockey Club. He did not then attempt to have that section of the statutes repealed. The act creating the State Racing Commission was passed in 1880. During those years the bookmakers operated unopposed on the race tracks as they now operate in Louisville and will again operate on the race tracks if Mr. Bruce succeeds in his present effort.

It is provided in the act that Mr. Bruce's clients tried to have declared unconstitutional.

"Provided, That a refusal of the commission to grant any racing association a license or to accept any racing association at least forty days, if desired, shall be subject to the review of the courts of the State."

But Tilles, Adler and others were not satisfied with this provision. They wanted the whole act declared unconstitutional, for that act though it may not be known to Mr. Bruce, who knows so little, as revealed in his communication today, provides:

"Said commission shall have the power to prescribe the rules, regulations and conditions under which running races shall be conducted in this State."

Under that provision the State Racing Commission has the power to prohibit bookmaking on the tracks and it has exercised and enforced that, the handbooks in Louisville.

ONE BRAND- ONE QUALITY- One Size Package

All our skill, facilities, and lifelong knowledge of the finest tobaccos are concentrated on this one cigarette—CAMEL.

Into this ONE BRAND, we put the utmost quality. Nothing is too good for Camels. They are as good as it's possible to make a cigarette.

Camel QUALITY is always maintained at the same high, exclusive standard. You can always depend on the same mellow-mild refreshing smoothness—the taste and rich flavor of choicest tobaccos—and entire freedom from cigarette aftertaste.

And remember this! Camels come in one size package only—20 cigarettes—just the right size to make the greatest saving in production and packing. This saving goes straight into Camel Quality. That's one reason why you can get Camel Quality at so moderate a price.

Here's another. We put no useless frills on the Camel package. No "extra wrappers!" Nothing just for show!

Such things do not improve the smoke any more than premiums or coupons. And their added cost must go onto the price or come out of the quality.

One thing, and only one, is responsible for Camels great and growing popularity—that is CAMEL QUALITY.

The CLAN CALL

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I. Young Carlyle Wilburton Dale, or "Hill Dale" as he chose to be known, is a wealthy coal operator. John K. Dale, citizen of the Hatway Bottom, in eastern Tennessee, about ten miles from the coal camp, is a determined man who makes his living by trapping. He meets John Littlefield, a mountaineer girl. By this, a factor of the hills takes him to John Moreland's home. Moreland is a man of like nature. He has an old friend who is like him. David Moreland, years ago, owned a rich, oil deposit, a man named Carlyle Moreland, to describe him. Carlyle caused Dale to believe this man was his father.

CHAPTER II. Dale arranges to make his home with the Morelands, for whom he maintains a deny long.

"The mountain you had to come over to come here, Mr. Dale." Moreland began his big voice filled with an old, old sorrow. "It is known as the old Moreland's mountain mostly because David Moreland is buried in the very highest place on top of it, him and his wife. He was my brother and was the best brother a man ever had. It was after the talk of the neighborhood how much we liked each other. Up until the time he was married I went with him where he went and he went with me when I went. I'd fight for him, and beat him if I'd get him hard to tell, even after this long time...

"David, he was a strapping big man, like all of the Morelands. He was about you size and grey-eyed like you, and he had brown hair like you. When you walked up to the gate, it made me think o' him the day he was married; he was all dressed up in dark blue like you. Then David he went up here one summer and found this vein o' coal. He got law for possession of the mountain and moved his wife up here. The rest of us lived over to the lake. Look round them.

"One day I got a letter from David, which said that a man named John K. Carlyle was a going to buy his mountain and the coal and said that his wife was painful sick. A few days later she died, and left a baby which died, too, according to a old legend by the name o' Cherokee Joe, who knew my pop and knew David. And a month later we was all dragged from our beds by this same Cherokee Joe, telling us that Carlyle had shot David. Carlyle, Cherokee Joe said, was drinkin' hard. This made the shooting through a legend.

"It was right nigh to three days later when we git here and found poor David layin' dead on the floor. We scoured the mountains for him and none around is a search for the dead who killed him, but we never found him. The last up here looked pretty, and it belonged to us by David's death, so we moved up here to live and that's us.

"Major Brasier, I found him the end o' my brother and he would not put the case in the hands of the law. But we was all dead. A Moreland never goes to the about o' nothing. He pays his own debts, and he's -- what is he?"

John Moreland arose and paced the porch floor, which creaked under his weight. He stopped before Dale and went on said:

"Now you'll know why I was so quiet to you, when I heared you come the Carlyle part. John K. Carlyle, he's the best man at ever lived. And he be you. That's why we never had the courage to tell the whole story. David he's a good man, but he's toward a foreign land."

That was indistinctly saying honey from the heart of a man in pain. He gave no sign that he had heard anything out of the story, but a man's person was said and seemed to him the former John K. Dale was the man he had just named.

John K. Dale, however, came from West Virginia, and as had many others, he was born in the mountains of the Moreland country.

The old man interrupted young Dale's thinking.

"Well, when you have dinner ready, you come to have dinner ready, party now. Would ye like to wash, Mr. Dale?"

"Yes" was the answer, and in the tones of Hill Dale's quiet voice there was a shade of meaning that Moreland did not catch. "Yes, I'd like to wash."

CHAPTER II

In the Cup.

Dale found the humble home of his mountaineer host a home in the fullest sense of the word.

At the noonday meal he met Mrs. Moreland and the sons of the household, and they were exactly as he had pictured them. Mrs. Moreland was quiet, motherly, always smiling, as straight and real as her husband. The sons, Caleb and Luke, were as much alike as the fingers on your hands; they were tall and broad-shouldered, grey-eyed and brown-haired.

Before noon-day Dale had become acquainted with the rest of the Morelands, and he liked them every one. He was at the cabin of his host a gray old father and mother for a long time.

When supper was over John Moreland lighted the big glass lamp in the best room, and the family and their guest gathered there to spend the evening. Then the lanky moonshiner and his mother came in.

Granny Heck had the sharp features and the stamp'd thin figure of a witch. She wore a faded blue bandana about her white head, and she carried a long pickery staff, there was a red-stemmed clay pipe in her mouth, and her dark calico skirt had a tobacco pocket in it.

He was seated her into the room. He walked to the center table, faced about, and said with a low and oily sweep of his right hand:

"It's off buy, this here's maw. Now, she tells fortunae."

"So this here," creaked Granny Heck, looking over the brass rims of her spectacles. "Is Mr. Hill? Well, well, I jest thought to myself 'I'd come up and see ye Mr. Hill, and tell ye for fortune'."

She stepped into the rocker that Dale had placed for her.

"All ye said to the smiling Mr. Moreland will ye bring me a cup half full o' 'yer grannie?"

When the cup came the fortuneteller took it and shook it and patted it, all the while muttering mysterious words that she had learned from the old Indian Cherokee Joe, which served her purpose very well.

"I see," she mumbled more or less sepulchrally, "a powerful good-looking girl in another dress, with her hair a-lain away down her back. A bare-faced youth with big, party eyes. She's not far from a low cliff overlooking a valley through the laurels. Mr. Hill. This is in the past."

"In the future" she went on slowly, "I see the here as plain as daylight through a window, a swell big mob, with curly black hair and curly black beards, and with eyes like a ruff-hawk's, and I see you, too, Mr. Hill, and I see a light a master-light. Lord be merciful, what a sight! But you'll marry the girl after all, Mr. Hill."

She laughed. The old woman had deserted Babe Littlefield but who was the "big, dark man"? Some fellow who had lost his heart to the mountain girl, perhaps.

When the Hecks had gone John Moreland leaned forward and inhaled his guest on the nose.

"That that big man mentioned in town" you fortune, he said, "right he's been Black Adam. Black Adam, he lives in the pop and mother a few miles up the river. As big as a skinned horse he is and plumb on-going strong. He's been a fugitive. He's referred to marry him for a year or two, and she won't listen to him."

"Ef ever ye had to fight Black Adam" John Moreland went on, "ye want to fight him with a two-eyed shotgun and buckshot. He's the meanest man on earth, snake-broth and poison in his religion made him. But when ye begin a makin' love to Babe Littlefield I reckon the ain't no danger o' you havin' trouble with Black Adam, and you ain't likely, I take it, to make love to him."

"This Babes the best one o' the Littlefields I ever seen."

John Moreland reached for the leather-bound old family Bible. He opened the book at random.

"I didn't tell ye afore Hill Dale. My brother David, he was the hope o' his people. He was betterin' the rest of us. The one big aim o' his life was to educate us all, the benighted. You were benighted, and we know it. He meant to do it with the coal he'd found. As I've done told ye, we ain't never had the heart to sell the coal. I hope ye'll have a fine rest, Mr. Dale. I won't a goin' to call ye 'Master' no more, Hill Dale!"

"Ain't!" smilinly said the younger man. "Hill Dale is right, y'know. Good night, John Moreland."

Dale removed his shoes and outer clothing, blew out the light, and went to bed in the best room's hand-carved black walnut four-poster.

For a long time he lay there awake, and stared through a little window toward a bright star that burned like a beacon fire about the pinefringed crest of David Moreland's mountain.

He believed he understood now why his father had turned a greenish gray when this coal property was mentioned to him. He believed he understood why his father had flatly refused to investigate this vein. But he was wholly at a loss to account for the use of his own given name instead of Dale.

He ailed toward the mountain again, he spoke as though he were talking to David Moreland himself.

"I'll be through for you, old man. This shall be my country."

BIG JERSEY COW SALE!

In Guess' Lot across from Depot at

Thursday, Oct. 20

We are going to offer 35 head of choice Jersey Heifers and Fresh Cows. These Heifers are from King's Combination Jersey Bull, Reg. No. 116476 and Cows are fresh, calves by side. Then some Cows to freshen in 20 to 30 days. These Cows and Heifers come from J. A. Wilson's herd.

Also 8 or 10 heavy Springers whose Dams were sired by Imported Bull and these were bred to a Hood's Farm Bull owned by J. E. Crider Creamery Co. We will have as nice a lot of Cows and Heifers as were ever offered in this end of Kentucky.

The reason for selling is that the herds have grown until they haven't barn room and we want to give our neighbors a chance to secure at auction some choice cows.

If you are thinking of going in the Dairy Business you can't afford to miss this Sale. And if you want a cow for home use, come! Select your choice as this collection has no equal this season.

Will also sell King's Combination Jersey Bull No. 116476, a fine individual 7 years old and 1 or 2 good yearling Bulls.

Trains from South due to arrive at Fredonia 7:45 a. m., leaves 4:40 p. m.; North arrives 10:52 a. m., leaves 3:03 p. m. Sale will begin promptly at 11:30 a. m. Terms made known on day of Sale.

These Cows are all home grown, as good grade Jersey as can be had anywhere.
